

ABSTRACT

A system may include a plurality of loads, a plurality of power supplies adapted to provide power to the loads, and control logic coupled to the power supplies. The control logic may determine whether output current from at least one of the power supplies to a load is below a lower threshold and, if so, may cause at least one of the power supplies to be disabled.